

"THE TOURIST" HAS LOCAL COLOR

New Alhambra Attraction Features New People, Including Singing Trio.

"The Tourist," the musical comedy production at the Alhambra, this week, opened the week's attraction Sunday. "The Tourist" is a timely little comedy showing in a burlesque way how all stock is bought and sold. The comedy has been localized and the setting is supposedly at Cloudcroft. All the sets are shown in the lobby of a hotel at "Cloudcroft." The hotel manager and his staff furnish a good deal of the comedy situations. However, both seem inclined to make themselves circus clowns rather than comedians.

Orville Harris, who was a favorite with the Redman company last year, played the lead. He was an enthusiastic oil salesman with a great deal of enthusiasm and a very little confidence. However, he proves in the end that even though he sold his stock recklessly he had enough "stock" in it to end up by buying it back. If Harris had more support from the rest of the cast, the play would be better. The chorus actors are of the same type. The girls are really pretty and although the runway seems to be used too much they made a hit with each appearance. Their costumes are fresh looking and attractive.

Little Osella, the graceful dancer, danced two delightful interludes, which were examples of art and grace. If the little dancer were only as generous with her encores as some of the less notable members of the company, who seem over appreciative of the applause, it would be better.

Several new members of the company were good. A trio of singers made a convincing hit with the audience. These were, Messrs. Green, Smith and Howard, sang with a lot of pep and the fact that they use their personalities to good advantage made their numbers appreciated.

Another singer, Miss Annie McLoughlin, gave several selections which, although well presented, would have been better had she selected more modern songs.

Mary Hear The Sunday Concert At Liberty Hall

Large Audience Is Highly Pleased at the Splendid Music Rendered.

The second symphony concert given at Liberty hall Sunday afternoon delighted the audience even more than the first concert, which was given November 8. In appreciation of the efforts made by the musicians and the promoters of the concert, a great many El Pasoans attended, and, although Liberty hall was not filled, the audience was large enough to encourage the musicians. Whatever was lacking in numbers was made up in appreciation.

J. J. Guntal, leader of the orchestra, presented a program delightfully well arranged. The rendition of Haydn's Symphony in G major was given to particular advantage and the period of the strings, instruments blended with the horn and reed instruments to form a mingling melody, all in perfect union, that would have done credit to any group of musicians. Each of the selections was presented with beautiful interpretation.

The Orpheus club, a group of 35 male voices, presented a number of selections, all of which were wonderfully well given. The arrangement of the selections was such that all the abilities of the voices were brought out to good advantage. The first selection, "Deep River," was given with a richness that can only be acquired with highly trained voices. The clearness of enunciation is a distinguishing feature. "Banks of Allan Water," a selection given by request, was so appreciated by the audience that an encore was demanded. Charles Andrews, director of the singers, sang "Banks of Allan Water," accompanied by the singers, all humming in deep rich melody. The effect was wonderfully beautiful. The audience gave Andrews an enthusiastic ovation.

The entire event, from overture to finale, was a delight, and the opportunity to hear a concert like Sunday's program, given by the Symphony orchestra, not to mention the exceptional opportunity of hearing the Orpheus club, was a treat to El Pasoans.

The attendance Sunday numbered 2500 people as against about 800 at the previous performance, demonstrating the importance of this city musical organization. Gen. R. H. Hulse and party were among the guests.

Dr. Floyd Poe addressed the audience in behalf of James G. McNary, head of the Symphony orchestra organization, who was not able to be present, appealing to the people for continued support and promise of them a wonderful spring music festival if they properly support the next two concerts by the orchestra. This spring festival will include five artists of international fame, supported by a chorus of 100 El Paso voices and the symphony orchestra. A. B.

Bell Family In Fine Show At The Colon

High Class Acts Are Given, With a Change of Program Nightly.

Mexico's famous Bell family continues to please large audiences at the Colon theatre, on South El Paso street.

With 37 people, all of them members of the family, they put on a vaudeville performance that ranks as "big time stuff" anywhere. They have 100 acts and can run a full program every night for 10 nights without doubling.

George Bell, ventriloquist, has never had an equal in El Paso. He actually turns his head away from the mannikin and yet the enunciation of the dummies is perfect. It is almost impossible to detect any movement of his lips.

The various acts are all high class. In Saturday night's bill, for instance, they presented a dancing tableau representing a scene in Rome at the height of that nation's existence that was beautiful in setting, costume and execution; a series of athletic dances by ten young women that was as beautiful as it was artistic; a Hawaiian number, rich in music and setting; a violin number that was very entertaining and several other features, all marked by the ability of the artists. The audience and there were many Americans in the number, applauded so vociferously that the performers in each case were forced to respond to many encores.

There is no more remarkable family of performers in the world than the Bell family and there are few vaudeville bills anywhere that equal an evening's entertainment such as the Bell production. G. A. M.

TRIXE IS REAL LAUGH PROVOKE

Fleshy Actress Pleases In New Play—Gets Hearty El Paso Reception.

Those El Pasoans who failed to take advantage Sunday matinee and night of the opportunity to see Trixie Friganza missed a treat and you will not have a chance to rectify their mistake, for the house is going to be filled for the rest of her stay here. If the quality of her show here is a criterion.

In "Poor Mama," Miss Friganza has a vehicle of entertainment that the "pauze" director who is the words of the office boy. The lines themselves are funny, and the plot is just as funny, but Miss Friganza adds a zest and an enjoyment to the show that few others could put into it. She is a natural comedienne and, built as she is—the champion screw-wreck actress in captivity—she capitalizes her embarrassment to the fullest extent and makes it a source of amusement all the time at the way "she kids herself" as an under plot.

Seated Miss Friganza's show has a good company, including two small children and three not so small—all supposed to be her own offspring in the play, in which she is a woman 42, married to a young man 25 who is after her money and a motion picture actress of the same time.

Three of the "children"—the three largest—are very clever singers and they entertain the audience with a number of selections, including one at the close of the show, "Beautiful Mother of Mine," that is very pretty. These "other" women are sisters, Misses Annie, Cherry and Ruth Dennis.

Miss Friganza's leading man is George W. Hanna, Jr., former leading man in the same company with Marie Rick, of El Paso.

The show is full of good musical numbers—everybody does one or more of the most popular of which is Miss Friganza's number, "It Is Harder to Take It Off Than It Is to Put It On," which is a scream since it is accompanied by the efforts of the mountaineers to "reduce" by the use of all the approved methods.

The singer is elaborate, two acts showing a ranch home in a California orange grove and the third showing the interior of a home in a California orange grove and the third showing the interior of a home in a California orange grove.

To miss the show is to miss a treat. G. A. M.

The show is a collection of the most interesting and unusual things in the world. It is filled all day and evening Saturday and Sunday. It will remain for several days.

In the museum there is Tommy, "half man, half monkey," said to have two hearts; the Blue Queen, in a glass case with $5,000 five bars; "Selma," called "the woman with a million eyes" who asserts that she can tell you anything you want to know; Mildred, the skeleton grandma, seven and a half feet tall and weighing 10 pounds; the "ghost" man, a "ghost" woman, a six-year-old boy is a head taller than his father; glass shows, window looking out and blowing glass, and other features.

A second show, in the rear of the museum, features plastic posing in which five figures reproduce masterpieces of the art world.

AMUSEMENTS

THE ALHAMBRA PLAYERS. With the addition of the new players who have just arrived from the east, the Alhambra Players is an organization that is second to none. The play presented this week is "The Tourist," or "A Flyer in Hot Stocks," a happy comedy with bright dialogue and many amusing situations. The play is interrupted with several very pretty and pleasing song numbers by the principals and chorus and the costumes are new and pleasing.

The Alhambra wishes to especially call attention to the vocal offerings of Miss McLoughlin and also of the harmony trio, Messrs. Green, Smith and Howard. These people are real singers and will prove popular favorites with patrons from the time they are first heard. The charming little dancer, Osella, is seen in new and wonderful dances and the show as a whole makes very delightful entertainment.

Beauty Chats By Edna Kent Forbes

The Charm Of Vivacity.

VIVACITY will cover a multitude of social flaws, a fact which many of my correspondents do not seem to understand. I know this because I am in almost daily receipt of letters signed "Sweet Sixteen," "High School Girl," etc.—letters from girls who are undoubtedly quite round, and who say they want to talk when out in company but feel too self-conscious.

If you have any natural vivacity, by all means cultivate it. The social world is full of quiet, mouse-like little creatures who occupy the corners of the room. Even a forced vivacity is not a bad thing, since it will lead to a spontaneous animation later on.

There is one thing, however, to guard against if you are a "very young girl." Your vivacity must not be too "loud." Very young girls, in the exuberance of their youth and high spirits are apt to forget this.

The vivacious face, with its ready smile, its flash of teeth and its sparkling eyes, is always pleasing. The girl who is still a social favorite. Her very vivacity of expression would cover up such depression as a puer nose, a homely mouth or any such flaw in her good looks.

I want you, of course, to take seriously my advice about cultivating vivacity, and I want you also to use your intelligence about it. The senseless pushing and jostling, teasing and glaring, that passes for high spirits among many of the very young girls one sees on the streets or in trolleys, is not vivacity. You must apply your common sense to this as well as to everything else.
